

Abadar

Abadar is the god of contractualist ethics and creation-of-value-through-exchange. Being a very alien and inhuman god He's done a moderately bad job of communicating this about himself. He holds himself and his priesthood to a fairly strict notion of fairness which is understood by mortals to be about evenly dividing the gains from trade insofar as these can be effectively estimated by both parties. His priesthood has the most developed theology of Law and has historically had fairly few concerns that might compete with their service to pure Law and accordingly is trusted to arbitrate international disputes.
